

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary and present it as "news" days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

For one small group of extremely rich and powerful executives to mandate the airing of political propaganda is wrong and points out the danger that exists in our society around "freedom of the press". This is taking our system back to the early 1900's before our system had checks and balances.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
